The definition of everything living and human --of identity and alterity-- poses problems in terms of values and social representations. This is also the case for practices of differentiation and gendering, relationships between environment and society, and the articulation between power and knowledge.

Research Topics:

- The Body and the social sciences
- The construction and dissemination of medical knowledge
- Talking about mental health today
- The biologization of the social: Discourses and practices
- The Body and politics
- Space, environment, and health
