Centered on the causes and effects of the regulation of economic and social activities within a globalized context, the purpose of this theme is to sponsor research that combines theoretical and empirical dimensions in investigations of both the conditions under which new regulations of economic and social activities are formed and of their effects.

Research Topics:

- Analysis, measurement, and evaluation of law and regulation
- Business, institutions, and organizations
- Property rights, intellectual property, and exchanges: The social construction of markets
- Finance, globalization, and the production of rules
- Flow, exchanges, and institutions
